

Jan Rosemergy, Ph.D.

Jan Rosemergy is the Director of Communications for the Vanderbilt Kennedy Center for Research on Human Development, a position she has held since 1979. She also is Director of Dissemination for the University Center for Excellence in Developmental Disabilities.

Dr. Rosemergy is responsible for developing and implementing internal and external print and electronic communications for the Center, and for managing activities that communicate the mission and activities of the Center to multiple audiences for multiple purposes. Working with the Center's leadership, she manages communication and dissemination activities to support the Center's research, clinical activities, family and community outreach, and development. She also manages the Center's research education events. As a volunteer, she has served on boards of directors of several disability organizations and State councils and task forces.

Dr. Rosemergy has more than 30 years' experience in disability-related communications and dissemination for diverse audiences, and an additional 13 years' experience in other areas of higher education administration. She has a Ph.D. in English from the University of Michigan.